

Governor M. Jodi Rell today announced that the state has developed a comprehensive energy plan that uses $38.5 million in federal stimulus funds to expand fuel cell initiatives, improve energy efficiency of state buildings and provide incentives to homeowners and businesses for alternative energy technologies to reduce energy costs.

“I am extremely proud of this plan, which strengthens the ‘green’ foundation we have established in Connecticut,” Governor Rell said. “The jobs that will be created are in the industries and technologies that will shape our future – alternative and renewable energy. The emerging industries call for exactly what Connecticut can offer – a highly skilled work force and one of the most productive in the nation.”
